This well-known French philosopher, Jean-François Lyotard, offers a glimpse into his ideas on the theory of knowledge and what he has called the "postmodern" (post-modernist) era which has dawned since the French Revolution of 1789. In the 1970s, Lyotard had found himself perplexed by his age.

He felt that he was the archetypal Parisian intellectual. "There was this person, born around 1930, who was still living in the 'lost world' of the pre-modern age, a period which he supposed to be virtually, if not actually, extinct," says Christopher Norris. (from The Bigger Picture: Understanding the Postmodern Era, The Australia Institute, 2013) What's New? Topics discussed:

The signification of the 19th century as a revolutionary period. What Lyotard had termed post-modernism. How the new media have made people feel guilty about their immediate and limited access to knowledge. How the public intellectual has been replaced by the celebrity intellectual. Will intelligence become a privilege? Works Cited: The Contemporary Condition.
