Avernum: Escape from the Pit is a deep, engrossing, story-driven roguelike RPG that marks the return of the best-selling Avernum series after a thirteen-year hiatus. Featuring a fully voiced narrative, nonlinear gameplay, deep progression and m... Awesome rpg 4/5 Avernum: Escape from the Pit The stories of the elves, the good and the bad, are as deep as the land, and there's no way to enter without putting some effort into the main character. The world is unique and quite interesting to explore, your main task is to gather your wits and keep going. And when you can get an item that makes you look like a grimdark 8 bit palette, you could make the best archer in the world. The main game is very short so the replay value is pretty high. But there's also a proper ending that makes Avernum: Escape from the Pit a real gem. Worth the time of your life. + Really nice OST+ Maps are big enough to avoid loading times+ Gameplay is great on the PC and on the console+ Lighthouse is awesome+ Awesome and clean mini-graphics+ Strong story with a good atmosphere+ Voice acting is detailed but not realistic - No real challenge nor any kind of replay value Avernum: Escape From the Pit has the things that you would normally expect from a RPG, like quests, townspeople that you can talk to, and most importantly- main NPCs. Avernum also brings you some challenges. Monsters, puzzles, stealing, fighting enemies with resources you have, finding out items that will help you become harder to kill, and a chance to fight an enemy. Each quest has a boss, and you have to play around with your friends to get the best ending. The quests are not the hardest or strongest and the game gives you the chance to customize your character to the max. It's a bit like a deep, hardcore action game where you are also a mage. But you need to find your spells and gather your resources from enemies. You may use some of the active spells and be able to turn battles to your favor, but sometimes you may also become paralyzed by fear or paralyzed for a moment. The length of the game is very short, which means it will be easy to get over a whole playthrough in a week. But it's not bad at all. In a few hours you can reach the end

Very good looking car (so far it looks better than Fast Food Empire for me), good concept and story. The controls are OK and the replay value should be decent. My only beef is that one of the cars is pink. It doesn't look good on a map with that little color variation. Also, I don't like that one of the challenges is "eat as many as you can". That's a bit much. Even though the title says 1-4 players, I haven't seen it work with more than 2, though that's not much of a complaint considering there are 16 different cars and venues. Good news though! No dreaded 24/7 online requirement in this game! You can play on the weekends. One thing that's really missing is a shortcut option. Now that the traffic lights have finally been implemented, every player should have an option to just race in. Personally, I think that would've increased the replay value, since I feel that when I race against people who always have an option for a shortcut, it gets old rather quickly. Overall, I thought it was a solid game with some good features. Give it a shot and let me know what you think! matchup against the Chiefs in this year's thrilling AFC Divisional Playoffs, after he sat out the remainder of the regular season with a thumb fracture. It wasn't until his car was blown up was it confirmed that he suffered a thumb injury, sidelining him in Kansas City for another postseason in a row. Amendola has been a weekly force for the Chargers during their return to prominence in the NFC West, earning an All-Pro nod in 2017 thanks to his 537 receiving yards and nine touchdowns. Although the first half of last season was a bit of a struggle, Amendola did not miss a snap the rest of the way. Although the Chargers are without the exuberant and prodigious wideout for a second time in the postseason, he is still the closest thing they have to a luxury they do not possess; wideout Keenan Allen missed the first two games of the season with a quad injury. In fairness, Keenan Allen is a much different player than his peers who should hog the spotlight in these matchups. The shifty and fast receiver does not create many highlights per se, but he makes up for it with his quickness and ability to adjust on the fly. To be blunt, though, the Chargers have just too much going on at wideout for the veteran to have quite the same impact as a healthy Amendola. Regardless, these last two weeks will be the last eight played by the 32-year-old for the Chargers in what has been quite possibly his final offensive rep for his career. Allen will be making his fifth career playoff appearance and fourth with the same team. He is currently on pace to have 839 yards on just 54 targets for seven touchdowns in two postseason games, putting him on pace for 1,451 yards and 16 touchdowns over 11 games. He has the capability to catch the short passes on the outside, but generally is looked to for the big play of the game in the red zone. In his last two playoff games, Allen has totaled three touchdowns and 98 receiving yards. Keenan Allen has produced seven touchdowns in the AFC Divisional Playoffs and added 257 yards in air yards. Although the Chargers need the playmaking skills of Keenan Allen, they were able to feast on opponents by moving the ball down the field. Quarterback Philip Rivers threw for three touchdowns and over 250 yards in the Week 8 game against the Raiders. Likewise, his counterpart Russell Wilson

I know that the other testing operators work the same way, for example == and!= will all the cases test the equality in one case and non-equality in the other. For instance, $ str1="this is a string" $ str2="this is another string" $ str3="this is another string with spaces" $ echo "$str1 == $str2" true $ echo "$str1 == $str3" false $ echo "$str2 == $str3" true But for the case in bash, I tested and the result is $ echo $str1 == $str3 0 $ echo $str1 == $str2 false Are all the cases done with equality testing in bash or some cases are mixed in with non-equality? A: The equality comparison operators are for comparing string values. The single == will compare the strings value as strings, and the = will test equality as numbers. The answer to your question is that = is used for comparison in all cases, except that some string comparison operators don't return a result based on comparing two strings as numbers. For instance: $ echo "abcd" == "abcd" 0 When you run echo "$str1 == $str2", the output is
