Applying more than one mask You can apply multiple masks to your image to adjust different parts of it at the same time. As you adjust the opacity, or "whiteness," of the layers using the Opacity slider, the layer affects all its masks. When you're done with your adjustments, you can deselect the mask you no longer want to work on. You can easily apply multiple layers of masks. Photoshop's layer masks can be added to an image either via the Layers palette or by the layer's anchor points. If you're adding multiple masks to an existing image, you can do this in one of two ways: * Use the Layers palette. After you launch the Layers palette, which appears as shown in Figure 3-7, you can create a mask by clicking the Create New Layer Mask button (first highlighted in the figure) below the Eraser icon and double-clicking the color box. After you add a mask, you see a box that looks like Figure 3-6 in front of the layer. Alternatively, you can create a layer mask by selecting a layer and clicking the button above the Layer Mask thumbnail (first highlighted in the figure), shown in the margin. You see the dialog box that lets you create the layer mask. As you adjust the levels of the masks, they affect each layer in the layer stack. For example, you can apply a mask that increases the overall contrast by making the background completely transparent and then reduce the opacity of the mask. The image in Figure 3-8 shows the initial image, with the layer mask applied, and the image following the mask's commands. You can also delete a mask by selecting it and then clicking the button just to its left. After you remove the mask, the image appears as shown in Figure 3-9, with the layer mask deleted. You can add, delete, or modify the opacity of multiple masks by using the button to the right of the Layers palette. (See the following section for more information on using the Opacity slider.) * Use layer anchor points. You can also add layer masks by selecting them and dragging the

What's New In Adobe Photoshop 2022 (Version 23.0.2)?

Many different kinds of injection mechanisms are known in the prior art, and are in use with several different kinds of containers. One kind of injection mechanism is the so-called plunger-type mechanism, in which an elongated plunger is reciprocated by a hand wheel or foot pedal. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 2,973,985 to Farkas discloses such an arrangement. U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,392,980 to Bea et al., 4,440,006 to Felts, 4,343,670 to Leung, and 4,459,582 to Lyon, Jr., disclose other types of plunger-type mechanisms. In addition, the prior art includes so-called pinchcock-type mechanisms, in which an elastomeric sealing element is pierced by a piercing element. For example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 2,950,118 to Rogers, Jr. and 2,946,905 to Kohler et al. disclose such arrangements. Still another type of injection mechanism is the "push-to-inject" mechanism, in which a user grasps a cartridge containing a quantity of a fluid and inserts the cartridge into a body of a recipient, whereupon the user grasps a plunger and presses it outwardly. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,449,968 to Joy discloses such a mechanism. Injection devices can be relatively complicated and costly, and some of the known devices are fairly bulky. In addition, certain ones of the known devices require two hands to operate, and some of the known devices are awkward or difficult to manipulate to effect a desired injection.
