Platforms: PC, Playstation, Xbox Publisher: illyGames Release Date: 2018 RRP: £24.99 You can buy Gates of Mirnah on the official website. Official Website: To experience something special, experience it directly! The Heretic Hundred has replaced the Ecclesiarchy in Osprey, as the old order of the realm is swept away by the constant war in the south and the vengeful power of the Ospreys. Despite the Church's efforts to shore up the stability of the holy kingdom through the discipline of the teachings and the strict order of the Liturgy, the circumstances of the people are constantly drawing them away from the carefully crafted imaginary of the Imperium. Rich individuals are fleeing to the havens of the Permides and Velkaradas, while the average citizen wants to enjoy their lives in the fresh air with as little interference as possible by the Church. The abominations of the Outer Darkness, and the grim reality of the tentacled monstrosities that call the Great Deep their home, have become common knowledge. The Imperium seems to be collapsing under the weight of both the Guardians' assaults and the darkness that lurks in the very center of the Imperium. Stories of the People and their Kingdoms of Osprey are in their greatest need of your support. Have a look on my Facebook page. To learn more on the ecclesiarchy, the origin and the state of the Ecclesiarchy from the ancient times to now, check out my podcasts, books and the UHU stores. What's new:

published on February 28th. A Red Dawn-like Amerikan version of the Maoist Revolution, where China's nukes undergird American economic control and where the civil rights of the power elite are sacrosanct, will spread across the world. Conservative Republicans will be coughed up by a domestic "Demsplainin' Bizz" version of Madame Mao, exploding like a mad black widow through the organs of American society. Spunky dissidents will not be tolerated as they see the Goodyear-Acura merger, with the Ford-Chrysler merger, through the way. The new Red Dawn soon may see a lot of Twinkies ejected from the warmth of American society, under the auspices of a darker, more paranoid industrial policy that commands more efficiency in the production of poverty for the comfortable. Though still brutal to the man, the enterprise will be one of the most efficient ever, since terror finance has depoliticized the rulers and the ruled alike. At the end of the day: The writer has seen a way for free will and common sense to blow the locks off of the garage doors of the controlled. The only thing standing between him and a fundamental redrawing of the foundations of our day-to-day lives is a determined individual's right to be able to stop them. And, at the moment, that right is one of the basic tenets on which this country is founded. The writer is not advocating, nor writing, a "whack-a-mole" approach to managing a shadow government that eliminates all dissenters, but it is entirely possible to stave off the necessary right of all Americans to revolt, just like a kind of periodic flu, if people come to recognize that the powers that be are headed toward oblivion and won't tolerate so much as a tiny germ of revolt in the process. With luck, the writer will get to witness it firsthand. Of course, this very astute commentary about the political landscape of the U.S. (as well as its place in the world) comes out of the response of almost every logical adult within the U.S. to not only the recent State of the Union Address, but also the spectacular planned swearing in of Attorney General, Eric Holder, along with his entire fellow bloodline team of Obama fascists; extending, of course, to his Cabinet members, his entire "shadow government". Under our existing legal system, the writer doesn't see much hope of fixing that political landscape, except
