worksWindows PC help! I just bought a new HP Pavilion Slimline laptop running Vista Home Premium (x64). It's pretty nice and responsive, but the sound volume is significantly below par with Windows 7 on my old Acer Aspire 7730G-3GZ. I read where the Windows 7 drivers were better than Vista, but this didn't solve the problem. I contacted HP for assistance, and they said their volume control was "on the product". I'm having a difficult time finding any specific specifications for this laptop in the BIOS (or any other source). I can't find any audio controls in the device manager and even when I try the System Information feature, there is only the Basic Audio category. Any ideas? (BTW, I tried running Winamp and xmms and they both had low volume output, and the volume control is no better. The same is true of MusicMatch Jukebox.) You could try the HP volume control utility that allows you to alter the audio levels for select devices. You can download it from HP or you can search the web for it. Most likely it is in the C:\Program Files\HP\QuickStart\ and then the name is HPVVolumeControl.exe I would also look to see if you can tweak the configuration settings for your motherboard's sound card. Most new motherboards have something like advanced sound or something similar. If you can find a way to change the settings for the sound card you e79caf774b
