Senior Justice Dipak Misra's verdict, in a highly symbolic case, went some way to assuage India's fears of being branded a "rape society," but the convicted man said he has been robbed of his life and vowed to appeal. "We are determined to fight this case all the way to the Supreme Court and beyond," said Varinder Kaur Sidhu, 18, one of the two young Indian women who cried on the death row where she has been kept for nearly eight years. The other woman, a fellow inmate, refused to speak to reporters. Relatives and friends of the two young women said they were happy for a rapist to die, but were "touched" by the fact that Sidhu would be hanged alongside a man who had killed a man in a 2014 triple killing in India's capital. In one of the most heinous recent cases of violence against women, Sidhu was convicted along with her uncle, Jagdish Singh, 65, in December 2015 of raping a 23-year-old physiotherapy student on her way back from a movie in 2012. The death sentence was upheld after a long-running trial, which heard how the victim was picked up by a man in a white car and taken to the home of Jagdish Singh, a 6d1f23a050
