Graphene oxide-supported Ni(OH)₂ loaded on graphene nanosheets as an effective electrode material for lithium-ion batteries. We reported here a facile route to the preparation of highly conductive and large area graphene/Ni(OH)₂ composite sheet that was explored as a promising electrode material for Li-ion batteries. The graphene sheets were first prepared by chemical exfoliation of a graphene oxide sheet, followed by the in situ growth of the highly conductive Ni(OH)₂ nanosheets on the surface of the graphene sheets. The large area graphene/Ni(OH)₂ composites with a sheet-like morphology were then prepared by facile wet-chemical processing at relatively low temperature. The well-defined graphene/Ni(OH)₂ composites were well-dispersed in polymer-based binder, showing a high content of Ni(OH)₂ and a high utilization of graphene.
