I would like to add tags for code (like jquery or asp-mvc), generate documentation (xdoc, doxygen) and highlight api. A: Either of this two with a large plugin list would work for you: Nano Notepad++ I would use the integrated documentation tools from Visual Studio for ASP.Net, so maybe some of the syntax highlighting options will help you with coding too. A: For creating tag files I have always used notepad++ + this plugin. You can do all the highlighting yourself or use a tag profile or even edit the xml files like they are in Visual Studio. For doc-build it's a matter of installing the xdoc and running its install script. As for the xdoc, I think you have to manually create the xml, but you can use the same plugin for the xdoc. A: I would also recommend NVUA. I made the switch to NVUA from ASP.NET Rocks and I'd highly recommend it. It's really easy to get started and you can generate pretty much any type of documentation you can think of. I'd recommend NVUA as it's free, well documented and there are tons of 6d1f23a050
