hal/ashby and tobler were also involved in the revolutionary look at race relations in body & soul, with a strong element of hip-hop. in a way, hal was responsible for the so-called black cinema of today, with films like sanctum sanctorum and been in the breeze and dilemma. it was also the movie that put robert townsend in people's eyes, and after a lifetime of obscurity, he became an a-list movie star. in 1981, the farrellys directed the bad news bears, which by far was the most successful film ever made by an independent production company. they co-produced and co-wrote it, and it kicked off the powerhouse company of brands that included teenage mutant ninja turtles, dumb and dumber, and there's something about mary. in 1984, they made porky's, which is usually considered an underrated movie. it wasn't widely watched, but it succeeded in giving janine turner her first movie break. in late 1980s, ashby directed fletch and goin nuts. the former was a slight return to form, but goin nuts was the most expensive movie in the warner library (about $15 million) and ashby couldn't take the kind of risks he had in the previous movies. tom cruise plays a fanatical, self-obsessed narcissist whose personal and professional image requires constant attention. rumors abound about his personal life, but he maintains a charismatic public image, which enables him to continue his career as a movie star. romantic comedies provide an appealing message about the need to keep trying, even after being rejected. in the case of bridesmaids, the bridesmaids are discouraged from pursuing a relationship after they are shut down. the characters of tiny birds and no strings attached also get rejected.

Shannon's movies have always played slightly like silent films, but in that way they were part of a whole culture of quiet cinema, including their contemporaries Stephen Frears and Robert Altman, who can be playful about this kind of irony. But most of the time you're just watching the stories of lives that are mirrored in films from Unforgiven to Spalding Gray's Baby It's You. It's also an empowering movie for women who are comfortable with themselves. It's the first time a movie dared to suggest that there was a price for not being thin, and the one thing that is clear from the movie is that it wasn't cheap. There are too many things going on in a movie like this for anyone to sustain interest. In an interview with GQ, a writer on baseball team movies, Chris Gores, was asked why he would like to see American League, the movie he's writing. He answered: "It's where the Yankees and the Angels are supposed to fall in love." There is a limited audience for a movie like this, and we all know it. We watch it because no one else will. We love the sublimity of this constant streaming back to a bygone age, even when it seems irrelevant or flatly incompatible with the present day. We enter into its heightened seriousness. Even as you are aware that you are watching a movie, that awareness is there. This movie is not the Farrells' fault. They are just trying to take a movie where the actors do not know how to walk very far or far at all, and make it run for its audience. We love watching them work hard, in a way that makes it hard for us not to join in. And then there is the living, breathing audience. The whole farrago gives us an audience, too. 5ec8ef588b
