"The Ten" was created as an imprint at Fox to continue the legacy of the X Men properties and we are incredibly excited to be working on the creation of a potential new X Men movie for the next 10 years," said Stacey Sher, President of Fox Filmed Entertainment and a former producer at Fox on "The X Men". Director Bryan Singer discussed the new movie. "I'm thrilled with the progress and am excited to deliver more of the X Men universe. While "The Ten" expands on the characters we know and love, and for the first time brings them together, it's also an unprecedented story told in a fresh way. It's going to be unlike anything that's come before." According to the people close to the matter, the addition of China and the Middle East into the roster of countries that will be receiving the film is recent news. The people close to the matter explained that it was an approach initiated by Fox, rather than Singer himself. The people close to the matter said that the actual film that will be released into the home video market will be slightly different than the theatrical cut, and the trailer that was shown at Comic-Con was completely trimmed and re-edited. Singer's approach to the film was reported to be somewhat collaborative, which is rare for a Singer film and director of the film. The trailers only had a handful of shots as compared to the trailer that had a room-full of X Men characters in it. Fox's latest film release, this summer's "The Wolverine", did the opposite of "The Wolverine" and "X Men: First Class", by receiving more marketing push than the previous feature film did, and both films were a box office success. The studio expected the same trend with this new film and already has a release date set for March 3, 2016. "The X Men" had both commercial success and a critical success and is widely considered one of the greatest superhero films of all time. Fox is quite happy with its $529 million worldwide box office result. "The Wolverine" is said to have made $546.5 million worldwide.
