In a way, BioDraw is a chemical structure-drawing application with templates, and it comes with more than 200 natural samples included to get you up and running. You can choose a molecule or a natural sample from the included database and populates it with ten aspects of an analysis. To create a 3D structure, simply draw the molecule using a 2-D graphical user interface. Once you're done, hit "Save" to export it and view it in 3D. This new version now also supports multiple-pass 3D rendering for better file output. Do not lose hope! This function was added to ChemLab Free 2008. It is called V3000 and stores the 3D coordinates, internal and external stored coordinates, atom counts, and atomic charges of molecular structures in a 3D database. It also has an eSearch function that searches by chemical formula, structure ID, and/or atom types. The eSearch Results screen of ChemLab Free 2008 contains the structure IDs which can be used to access the 3D structure or to enter the structure data into another software package for further analysis.
